H.M.S. PINAFORE

SCENE: Quarter-deck of H.M.S. Pinafore, off Portsmouth.

ACT I—Noon.

ACT II—Night.

SYNOPSIS:

ACT I.—The sailors of H.M.S. Pinafore greet Little Buttercup as she comes on board to sell her wares. She is overcome with remorse as she sees Ralph Rackstraw, one of the crew, but does not disclose the reason. Ralph is in love with his Captain's daughter, Josephine, who returns his love, but promises her father not to admit this.

Sir Joseph Porter, First Lord of the Admiralty, arrives with Hebe and his usual following of "sisters, cousins and aunts." He hopes to win the hand of Josephine.

Ralph is rejected by the dutiful Josephine, but when she finds him about to shoot himself, she relents and plans to elope with him.

ACT 2—Captain Coreoran is much disturbed by the uprising of his crew, the love of Josephine for a common tar, and the threatened court martial of Sir Joseph. Buttercup predicts a change in store for him.

Sir Joseph's theory, that "love levels all ranks" helps assure Josephine that she is doing right in marrying Ralph. Unfortunately Sir Joseph misunderstands her delight and believes himself the accepted suitor.

Dick Deadeye warns the Captain of the elopement and the two intercept the group. The captain, in righteous wrath, says "Damme," and is promptly banished by Sir Joseph, who in turn discovers Josephine's love for Ralph.

And now, Buttercup's secret is revealed. She had exchanged Ralph and the Captain in babyhood, and their social positions are reversed. Sir Joseph is only too glad to relinquish Josephine to Ralph; the Captain is comforted by Buttercup, and Sir Joseph is claimed by Hebe.

(Because of length of the program no encores will be given)
